

The Mighty Mongoose

The mongoose may look like a cute ball of fur, but be careful—this little guy is a snake killer! It's amazing how brave a little mongoose is when it meets a deadly snake. So what is the story behind this cute, wild animal? There are 38 different types of mongoose. They are found in forests, swamps, and grasslands in many places around the world. Mongooses have long bodies, short legs, and bushy tails. Their shaggy fur is gray or brown. Sharp claws help them dig holes and catch food. Mongooses eat small animals like insects, lizards, and frogs. They also enjoy eggs and fruit. In India some mongooses kill snakes—even large cobras. Though a poisonous snakebite could kill the mongoose, it still attacks the snake. How does it do such a brave thing? Well, the mongoose is very fast. When it meets a snake, it lets the snake strike toward it. Then the mongoose quickly darts out of the way. When the snake grows tired, the mongoose springs and grabs the snake by the back of the neck. The mongoose's sharp teeth bite deeply to break the snake's spine. The mongoose wins and the snake becomes dinner. Being both fierce and fast makes this animal a marvelous fighter. No wonder the mongoose has been called a snake's worst enemy!
